Not illustrated. 1889 Excerpt: ...It is the even, perfect wrist motion, true to the fraction of an ounce in the pull, and the steady, clean-cut action that does the business. Master of himself, with nobody to spoil his work, he has his own responsibilities, and the head must be master. He is as if he were a horse and had the brains of his jockey. How many a good man has come in boat length astern for want of a little sense! Some old hands may remember an English race as far back as 1861 won by an amateur, Casamajor, who was opposed to two great scullers. Casamajor was apparently beaten at the IN TRAINING. in Badminton Lib. (Litttt, Brown ?? Co) Elsie Venner. From Watsons Marahuna. (Longmans) G.) Thats too deep lo i n.e responded she Just look at that exquisite face. Whatever is it? It was an exquisite face and strangely attractive, and yet--Percy, said Ethel, turning half round, I do not quite like it, do you? There is something in the eyes that makes me feel uncomfortable, a kind of creepy something. Her voice sank, and she whispered in my ear, Something about it gives me a sort of feeling I have had once or twice with Marie, something unearthly. What is the picture, Grayhurst? asked Hardy. You have not looked it up yet. I turned up the number. No. 709. Elsie Venner, by J. Holder, R.A. After a pause I said, The artist has done his work marvellously well. I almost wonder that we did not identify it. There can be no mistake about it now; that is Elsie Venner to the life. How on earth he has managed to catch and fix that expression is beyond my power of fancy. It is a masterpiece of imagination, whatever it is technically. Who was Elsie Venner? inquired Hardy. &quo...
