

They Stay the Same

They Stay the Same is a passionate family saga. After migrating to America, the Russian, Jake Rosen, and the Italian, Al Mareno, became business partners and steadfast friends. Their families celebrated all religious holidays together. It was a common sight for their children, especially the Jewish Gary and the Catholic Tessa, to be kneading dough for Challah, dyeing eggs for Easter, trimming Christmas trees and lighting the Hanukah Menorah. They had an ecumenical existence until the kids fell in love. The people who loved them were the most resistant to this relationship. How did things get so ugly? It wasn't only unfathomable to the kids but also to all who had watched the closeness of these families throughout the years. Was all of that just a farce? What becomes of this relationship? How does it overflow into subsequent generations? You won't be prepared for the ending.
